Laboratory Development:

Coordinator, Manufacturing Systems Laboratory, University of Toronto, 1990-1998: I have developed this laboratory for teaching and research. The development of a flexible robotic cell has been completed. The cell was fully operational and includes two machines (milling machine and lathe), a robot server, and an automated storage and retrieval system (ASRS) as input and output devices. The laboratory contains the robotic cell in which the two decisions (robot move cycle, part sequencing problem) are jointly optimized. The software for the cell is developed by my former Ph.D. student, H.Kamoun, as a result of his and my joint research work. The detailed implementation of the software in the cell is carried out by two undergraduate students (Emil Chan, Daisy Lau). The cell has been successfully used to teach concepts of manufacturing systems (CIM/CAD) in an undergraduate course (IND307 Fundamental of Production, Spring semesters 1992, 1993), providing students with hands on experience in operating an FMS. In the second phase of the laboratory development, we integrated an Automated Storage Retrieval System with the cell.

Societal Impact Statement

Research Impact: My research revolves around solving various operations management problems with the goal of making production or service systems more economical and efficient. My efforts have been directed towards applying theoretical results, as well as developing new insights and techniques to solve problems that arise in manufacturing or service systems. Over the years, I have led a number of research projects in the area of manufacturing operations/supply chain management/logistics/healthcare management and made fundamental contributions to these areas. I have pioneered the research in the physical currency supply chain management, and sequencing and scheduling in robotic cells. As a consequence of my research impact to the field, I was inducted as a fellow of Production and Operations Management Society (POMS) in 2012. In 2020, POMS honored me by instituting Dr. Chelliah Sriskandarajah Early Career Award, in recognition of my sustained and significant scholarly contributions.

Impact to PhD Education: I have trained and mentored many doctoral students and served as PhD coordinator. I have contributed significantly to the PhD programs. During my career, I have served as chair or co-chair of 16 dissertations, several of my doctoral students succeed as prominent scholars and rise to the top of their craft at many major business schools.

Impact to Service: I have served as editor and associate editor of major journals in our field. I have provided extremely valuable service to the Operations and Supply Chain Management profession. I held several significant leadership roles in the Production and Operations Management Society (POMS) which is the flagship academy for professionals in production and operations management area. I served as the Associate Executive Director of POMS from 2004-2012. This task required a great deal of effort, dedication, and integrity. I was named Vice President - Finance of POMS in 2013. I was named a Departmental Editor for the Production and Operations Management journal in 2012 and Associate Editor of Manufacturing and Service Operations Management in 2013. Further, I was the general chair of the Production and Operations Management Society conference in 2011. POMS honored me in 2015 with the lifetime service award for several responsibilities I have shouldered since 2004. I served as President of POMS, 2020-2021, a distinction traditionally held by the very best scholars in the field.
