Societal Impact Statement

In teaching an Introduction to Financial Accounting class, most of my students are freshmen or sophomores and many are undecided in their final career path. Through my teaching, I not only teach the core concepts required, but I strive to remove any preconceived notions regarding what an "accountant" is and to provide real life uses, through illustrations of examples from my industry career, of the material.

In addition, I believe a very special part of teaching younger students is to help them to gain habits and critical thinking skills that will help them to succeed through the rest of not just their college years, but their careers as a whole. My students all know that I will challenge them and take them outside of their comfort zone to push themselves beyond what they thought they are capable of. I believe that if many of my students become truly aware of what they are capable of, the changes that they can make in the society after they leave A&M are beyond measure.

My students are well aware that I am available to them, not just for questions from class, but for questions from life. I spend much of my time mentoring and guiding students on a wide range of topics from what to major in to life and family struggles. I consider it one of my greatest honors to help these kids through this amazing and difficult period of their lives.
