SOCIETAL IMPACT STATEMENT

I positively impact society through my research, teaching, and service. My primary research employs archival methodology to explore the role of accounting in international capital markets. This interest arises from my extensive experience as an accounting standard setter, both domestically and internationally. Additionally, I investigate the role of market monitors, such as auditors and the media. My work has been published in esteemed journals, including Contemporary Accounting Research, the Review of Accounting Studies, the Journal of Corporate Finance, and the Journal of Accounting and Public Policy.

As a dedicated educator, I believe in transforming the study of accounting from rote memorization into a conceptual framework that provides students with a deeper understanding of the business world. Emphasizing concepts equips my students with the vocabulary and analytical tools to comprehend, evaluate, and explain the economics underlying organizations. To connect accounting concepts with real-world applications, I start each chapter with a podcast or video on a current event that spotlights the topics we will cover. Outside the classroom, I assist undergraduate students with resumes, career and internship opportunities, and coursework. My collaboration with doctoral students, both within and outside of Texas A&M, fosters the development of innovative research ideas and encourages a long-term perspective on the profession.

Overall, my work demonstrates a commitment to advancing knowledge in my field, preparing students to become well-rounded and socially aware professionals, and promoting inclusivity within academia and the accounting profession.
